AnyWARE Relocates and Expands in Austin

January 9, Austin, Texas— AnyWARE Inc., an Austin-based telecommunications integrator, announces it has relocated to 1114 Lost Creek Blvd, Austin, Texas.

AnyWARE, single source providers of enterprise-wide communications systems, has made the move into a larger facility to accommodate recent and projected expansion. The firm experienced revenue growth of 155 percent in 2005, and has added several key staff members to keep up with demand.

“We’ve been expanding in Austin consistently for nearly three years,” said Gary Lubbering, Vice President of Business Development, AnyWARE. “Companies are seeking to deploy new, converged IP voice and data technologies in their company networks. We’re excited about the momentum.”

Customers include AT&T, Diamond Shamrock, University of Texas, Texas A & M, State of Texas and State of Oklahoma.

AnyWARE offers customized telecommunications services for organizations relocating, expanding or seeking to upgrade to a converged IP voice and data network. Providing organizations with an alternative to “a la carte” services, AnyWARE integrates both telecommunications components and services to create cost-effective and dynamic solutions.

AnyWARE is HUB certified (Historically Underutilized Business) and a member of the Women’s Business Enterprise National Council.
